An Overview of Endocrine Disrupting Chemical Paraben and Search for An Alternative – A Review

Abstract Parabens are commonly used as preservatives and antimicrobial compounds in cosmetic, pharmaceutical and food industries. Structurally they are similar to estrogen hormone and they interfere with nuclear receptors for androgens, estrogens, progesterone, glucocorticosteroids etc. Hence, they are considered as endocrine disrupting chemical (EDC)s. Studies in both human and rodents have established the role of parabens in altering steroidogenesis and activity of enzymes that metabolize endogenous hormones. Parabens disrupt normal function of the hormones and lead to reproductive, developmental and neurological disorders; thyroid related problems, skin allergy and cancers. Scientific articles supporting these assertions have led some countries banning or restricting paraben usage. A number of substitutes, both natural and synthetic chemicals are now in market as alternatives of parabens. This review article aims to provide adverse effects of paraben as well as potent paraben alternatives. The major alternatives include formaldehyde, triclosan and phenol, but those chemicals also have toxicity and side effects which are difficult to ignore. Moreover, the natural compounds have low shelf life and less potency. Therefore, more research is needed to establish the alternatives of parabens.

Introduction

Parabens are a group of compounds, which are chemically parahydroxybenzoates or alkyl esters of para-hydroxybenzoic acid. They are commonly used worldwide as preservatives and antimicrobial agents in food, personal care products, cosmetics and pharmaceutical products (Lincho et al. 2021). There are mainly five types of parahydroxybenzoic acid esters: methyl paraben, ethyl paraben, propyl paraben, butyl paraben and benzyl paraben, each having different solubility, chemical and antimicrobial properties (Cashman and Warshaw 2005).

Parabens are chemically stable over a wide range of pH (from 4.5 to 7.5) and temperature, which make them a greatly preferred compound in beauty industry whereas their colourless and odourless physical qualities, as well as their water solubility properties play a key role in their demand in various therapeutic formulations in the pharmaceutical industry (Lincho et al. 2021). The features predisposing parabens for their high utility in multiple industries include their broad spectrum of antimicrobial activity, chemical inertness, low toxicity profile, low cost, sufficient water solubility, safety of usage, lack of distinct odor or taste, incapability of causing changes in consistency or coloration of products (Rastogi et al. 1995; Soni et al. 2001, 2005; Aguilar-Bernier et al. 2012; Terasaki et al. 2012).

Since mid 1920 s, parabens have been used in drugs and preservatives (Rastogi et al. 1995). They are a widely utilised group of compounds in cosmetics and pharmaceutical products, industrial and packaged food items. About 99% of leave-on cosmetics and 77% of rinse-off products were found to be paraben containing (Rastogi et al. 1995). Approximately 80% of all personal care products contain paraben.
