In present day society individuals linger by being uncertain about the usefulness of internet gaming which created the emergency to study that in what extent its uses remain beneficial for the mankind. The study aims at examining how excessive internet gaming behavior influences the development of anxiety and depression among college students. Data were collected from undergraduate college students (100 males & 100 females with 18-22 years of age) of Kolkata city. Anxiety, depression and internet gaming use were assessed with the help of Beck Anxiety Inventory (BAI), Beck Depression Inventory-II (BDI-II), and Internet Gaming Disorder Test (IGD-20 Test). Results indicated that difference between two genders (boys vs girls) and two groups (high & low gamers) were significant in case of both anxiety and depression but their interaction (gender*group) was significant only in case of anxiety. Excessive internet gaming exerts harmful effect in psychological functioning as anxiety and depression were higher among high gamers. Females were more affected than males.

Keywords: internet gaming, high gamers, low gamers, anxiety, depression

Internet is a worldwide mechanism of interlinked computer networks that are organized to interchange different kinds of data in various fields such as academic, business, government networks and many more. This is created by an effort to combine the mechanism used in computer with the various mechanisms used by the media as well as various telecommunications industries (Introduction to links & anchors, 2008).

An online game is a specialized area where network is developed among players by applying technology or the mechanism across Internet (Rollings & Ernest, 2006). Installation of proper hardware such as Xbox, Play Station is minimum prerequisite for some of the online games (Schurman, 2015). Participants commonly use high-speed Internet connections and in many instances some of them would visit at LAN gaming centers and Internet cafes where the participants require bring their own computer (Kalke, 2006).

Online games or video games have various positive social functions (Van Schie & Wiegman, 1997). Gentile (2009) documented some studies where they showed that prosocial online games induce prosocial behavior as they found such games significantly impacted the immediate helpfulness of the player. On the other hand, in many circumstances online game culture also faces criticisms as playing such games may create an environment that might promote cyber bullying, violence, and xenophobia. Gaming addiction or social stigma are also the concerns of many gamers (Rouse, 2013).
